WHO'S GOT A RIGHT TO RHODESIA

Special: Inside Rhodesia—where 270,000 whites hold power over six million blacks.

Since 1972, black guerrillas have been fighting to overthrow the current regime, under which, says producer-reporter Irv Drasnin, "racial discrimination is law." This report examines the situation as it stands today.

The whites are determined not to be "pushed off" the land their ancestors began settling in 1890. Staying put has meant turning farms into fortresses and traveling in armed convoys—while enjoying such luxuries as swimming pools.

For the blacks, white rule has resulted in squalid housing, low wages and the risk of arrest if they complain. Despite intimidation, dissidents are calling for majority rule. And a guerrilla leader says: "We will continue to negotiate on the battlefield rather than at the conference table."

The report includes interviews with Prime Minister Ian Smith and prominent blacks. (60 min.)
